"Where there is a Will there is a Way". That means if you truly want something you can find a way to achieve it. I agree with this statement, because I think you need to know why you are doing something to be able to manage to do it. When you know what end result you want to get, it gets easier to take action and do it. Firstly, your own will to achieve something gives you motivation to work harder. Secondly, it is easier to create a plan of achieving your goal, because it depends on how much you want it and how many efforts you devote. It takes courage to start doing something and it can be intimidating at first, but it pays off.

In my life, I had a period of time when only my desire to have great results helped me to be able to do it. I was having my final exams and was completely burned out, but my goal was giving me power and motivation, that is why I didn't give up and continued my hard work. The same situation happened to my friend who was sick and tired, but still managed to win her sport competition.

She is an athlete and she has always dreamed about getting a first place. She worked hard and won the competition.

These examples show that your own wish to achieve something is a first step of making it come true. You can always find a way, you just need to devote some time and effort and it will be worth it in the end
